

CASE REPORT: CONCURRENT PERIPHERAL OSSIFYING FIBROMA AND CYST OF THE PALATINE PAPILLA.

*Hala Elkammar, Adham Hussien Fahmy, Sara Adolf Barsoom Azab, Iman Mostafa
Abdel Meguid El Sayed, Bassant Mahmoud Bahgat Moustafa, YARA YOUSSEF
MOUSELHY YOUSSEF, Reham Elbanna*

Abstract

Peripheral ossifying fibroma (POF) is considered to be a reactive soft tissue tumor-like growth. It is widely accepted that this lesion originates from the periodontal ligament cells(1). Clinically, POFs favor the anterior maxillary region, with a strong female predilection, especially in the second decade of life. In spite of the reported recurrence rate, POFs exhibit a benign biological behavior

International Journal of Advanced Research (IJAR) 2019, January