Islamic Perspective on Democratisation between Theory and Practice: A Comparative Study of the Egyptian and the Tunisian Revolutions

Yasmine Zeinelabedine Ahmed Mohamed Radwan

Abstract

Uprising of Islamic dimension is the most important trait of political life post the Arab revolutions especially in Egypt and Tunisia. A great debate among political intellectuals focuses on its reasons and its impact on the long term inside the Egyptian and the Tunisian societies, is it an imposed or a selected alternative of the secular regime? Parliamentary elections in Egypt (The Freedom & Justice Party and the Light Party) and Tunisia (The Renaissance Movement Party), and presidential elections results in Egypt proved that is the people choice which arises the following research problem

First Graduate Conference "Perspectives from Economics & Democratisation Studies" Collaborative project between the London School of Economics & the Faculty of Economics & Political Science, Cairo University London School Of Economics London 2012, January

Copyright É 2026 [Future University in Egypt]. All rights reserved.